A Green Roofing Blog by Greenstar, the leading manufacturer of green roof systems Posts from the 'Green Roofs' Category Green Roofs or Organic Roofs? Green roofs and organic roofs are the newest revolution in roofing. They are only starting to pop up all across the country in response to the United States President's support for the Rocky Mountain Institute's work on green roofing. It is exciting to see so many new green roofs popping up all around the country, but what exactly is a green roof and what makes it so special? Read on to find out. First of all, what is a green roof? A green roof is a rooftop which has been covered in vegetation. It is important to note that this type of roof is not exactly the same as a grass roof, which is a roof that is covered in vegetation. A green roof has a totally different purpose; it is meant to be a roof with a living environment in addition to a roof with a living, and growing, environment that can even add a whole new dimension to your home. This way, you get the best of both worlds, a roof that is both a roof and an environment. If you have a lawn on top of your house, you are normally left with two choices when it comes to dealing with the lawn. You can either destroy it by mowing the lawn until it is completely dead, which is exactly what your yard is, or you can mow it and then plant grass seed so that you have a full and lovely green lawn. A Green Roof – An Environment on Your Roof With a green roof, you get the best of both worlds. Instead of a dead lawn, you get a living lawn on your roof, all with the least amount of effort. A roof covered in lush greenscaping makes a house more than just a home – it becomes a resort, an environment that you can relax and enjoy. A green roof is a roof that is fitted with a large living layer of vegetation. The plants that are used are both designed and grown to be the perfect fit for your roof. The plants that are in use are chosen because they require very little sunlight
